The culture and preparation of tea

In China and Japan seed is usually planted straight into the field, close together in a line or in circles of about 18 in. diameter. Thus a hedge is formed or a series of hive-shaped clumps which merge into each other giving undulating rows 4 to 6 ft. apart. In Japan the seedlings may be selectively thinned out. In India and Ceylon nurseries are practically always used, with the seed spaced 5 to 8 in. apart. The nursery is shaded and watered, and after a year, eighteen months or two years the seedlings are transplanted in the field. In India the plant is lifted whole, with a clod of earth perhaps 18 in. long and 6 in. in diameter, and planted thus. The clod is unbroken, and this method possible because planting is carried out in the dry season when the silty soil sets firm and hard. In Ceylon, Java and Eastern Africa, the stem of the seedling is cut at 6 to 8 in. above the ground at the time of planting, then the root is pulled from the loosened soil and planted as a stump. Clod is preferable to stump planting because there is less setback in the subsequent forming of the bush.
